Each layer has its own individual transparency, thereby allowing you to see the contents of each layer through the layer underneath. The transparency of a layer is a property of that layer's selection. In this chapter, you learn how to create and modify the transparency of the selection in an image. You also learn how to create and modify the opacity of the selection. Adobe Photoshop provides a number of options for modifying transparency and opacity. The _Opacity_ option will be familiar to users of the desktop versions of Photoshop. The _Keep Transparent Pixels_ option is new in Photoshop CC. The _Darken Images_ option is also new to Photoshop CC. The suggestions that follow will help you to create a wonderful effect in Photoshop. Remember, though, that a layer is not an image, it's just another feature of the image. You can build a finished product in other software. ## Creating Transparent Layers You can create a transparent layer any time you want to create a new layer with a new setting. Simply use the Create a New Layer icon. Figure 6-1") shows the screen shot of the New Layer icon. You can also create a new layer by clicking the New Layer icon that appears at the bottom of the Layers palette (View → Palettes → Layers). Figure 6-1. The New Layer icon at the bottom of the Layers palette is the most convenient way to create a new layer. This method preserves the layer settings that have been assigned to the layer and makes it easy to return to a layer when creating additional layers. The New Layer icon is different from the following two icons. The following icons show the New Layer icon at the very bottom of the Layers palette (View → Palettes → Layers). In addition to the New Layer icon at the bottom of the Layers palette, there is also a New Layer icon in the Layers palette. In the Layers palette, you can double-click any color thumbnail to select it and

"You're actually getting a more substantial portion of protein than you might suspect," says Katie Wallace, a registered dietitian nutritionist with the USDA's food and nutrition service, part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. "You're getting a couple of egg whites, which are more protein-rich than some of the other protein sources out there." Yes, an egg white has 10g of protein, compared to 7.3g in a whole egg. But in the context of a nutritionally-balanced diet, it's not that big of a deal. The Egg Nutrition Center, a division of the American Egg Board, points out that the average egg provides more than enough protein for adults. In fact, when the USDA recently updated its Dietary Guidelines for Americans, they recommended that we each eat about three egg whites a week. "We're supposed to have five or six a week," says Randy Kaufman, a registered dietitian nutritionist in Berkeley, California. The amount of protein we need depends on our size and activity level, so just like the RDA for any other nutrient, it's up to each individual to find the amount of protein that best fits their needs. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration doesn't require that foods contain this amount, so check the nutrition label for details. Protein, though, is not the most important thing to look for when you're buying eggs. "Eggs are really, really easy to get these days," Kaufman says. "So, if you were really concerned about protein intake, you'd look at other options." Tip 5: Look for free-range eggs. Free-range eggs are a bit harder to find, but they're worth the effort. These hens are given the freedom to roam around and mate as they please, while indoor hen houses are limited to pre-determined hours to eat, sleep, and lay. But roosters can't do their job properly, which affects the egg shells and can make them tougher. (Pretty much all hens, though, are fed a balanced diet, so they don't get too skinny.) Egg shells should be bright yellow with no spots or blemishes. Normally, you won't even taste this

$("input#moveRight").click(function() { if ($("input#moveRight").attr("checked")) {
$("div#slide").animate({ left: "1000" }); $("input#moveLeft").attr("checked", true); } });
